

Contents	page
List of tables	viii
Preface	ix
List of abbreviations	xi
1. Introduction	1
1.1 Importance of the topic.	2
1.2 Approach and scope	7
Part I. – General considerations
2. The Economic function of retail organizations	17
2.1 Distribution costs and services	17
2.2 Cost shifting	21
2.3 Bundling	22
2.4 Price dispersion and product variety in distribution services	24
2.5 Competition and welfare in retail markets	27
2.6 Full price model of retail services	30
2.7 Measurement and evidence	32
2.8 Distribution services as strategic tools: An illustration	36
3. Retail demand	42
3.1 The household production model and retail demand	42
3.2 Substitutability and complementarity in retail demand: Prices	45
3.3 Applications	47
3.4 Substitutability and complementarity in retail demand: Distribution services	54

3.5 Retail competition and agglomeration effects	56
3.6 Distribution services and the retail demand literature	59
Appendix: Cournot aggregation and the consumption effect	62
4. Retail supply	66
4.1 Transformation functions and production functions	66
4.2 Economies of scale in retailing	69
4.3 Cost functions	74
4.4 The role of the consumer in retail supply	77
4.5 Implications for productivity analysis	80
Appendix: A production function for assortment	83
Part II. – Interactions between retailers and their customers
5. Multiproduct retailing	89
5.1 Item prices or item prices at points of purchase	90
5.2 The pricing policy of a multiproduct retailer with constant distribution services	93
5.3 Illustrations	95
5.4 The pricing policies of a multiproduct retailer with variable distribution services	97
5.5 Implications: The Internet	101
5.6 “Loss leaders”	104
Appendix: The nature of retail data and the construction of price indexes	108
6. Is packaging service provision or price discrimination?	113
6.1 Pure commodity bundling equilibria: Storage costs	115
6.2 Mixed commodity bundling equilibria: Storage costs and shopping costs	118
6.3 Discounts, premiums and package sizes: Stylized facts	122

6.4 Consumer heterogeneity and the number of package sizes	124
6.5 An illustration	127
6.6 Concluding remarks	130
Appendix: Quantity discounts are sufficient for a PCBE to exist	131
7. Retail forms and the provision of distribution services	134
7.1 Food store trends and their interpretation	135
7.2 Assortment choice and intertype competition	137
7.3 Econometric evidence on supermarkets	140
7.4 Extensions: Assortment and spatial competition	143
7.5 Depth, breadth and a classification of retail forms	148
7.6 Nonstore retailers	150
7.7 Shopping centres and shopping malls	154
Part III. – Interactions between retailers and other agents
8. Channel Issues	163
8.1 Economic power in a channel	163
8.2 Empirical evidence on channel power	167
8.3 Retailer lockout?: VHS versus Betamax	172
8.4 Incentives for expansion: backward integration, Wal-Mart and private labels	173
8.5 Distribution services in the economics and marketing literature on channel issues	180
9. Franchises	191
9.1 Quantitative information on franchises	192
9.2 Retail product trade name franchises: Gas stations	195
9.3 Retail product trade name franchises: New and used car dealers	197

9.4 Business format franchises	200
Appendix: The basic role of royalty fees	205
10. Retailing of services and concluding issues	209
10.1 “Fundamental” characteristics of services	209
10.2 Implications for retailing	213
10.3 Applications to financial services	217
10.4 Concluding remarks	219
References	223
Index	237